Kevin, Heather Marie,

I think we have made excellent progress on the Collaboration assignment with the Google Doc and Google site.

However, I kinda lost track of our direction with the extra-credit component of this collaboration. We have some of the thread in Slack, and some in Google. Kevin, can you summarize in an email your vision for that work? Thanks.

I agree on our project - one of the better (and more efficient) examples of collaboration in my higher ed experience. ;)

Looking forward to hearing your thoughts, Kevin.

Sorry it's taken so long to reply. For the choice assignment (Due July 15), here's what I was thinking we could do ...

I created a hypothes.is group called Nousioneers. We could attempt to answer the question I annotated in this article (<https://via.hypothes.is/https://blawgit.com/2006/06/13/protecting-your-blog-and-podcast>), then present our findings/annotations on the Google Site (Collection III Collaboration).

Join the Nousioneers here: <https://hypothes.is/groups/7YbwzWpj/nousioneers>

What do you think?

In general, I'm a little less interested in being so specific to blogs and podcasts, but would be willing to consider a broader topic - for instance:

<http://www.lcsun-news.com/story/money/business/2016/01/25/protecting-your-digital-content-online/79053814/>

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/andrea-smith/10-tips-for-protecting-yo_b_4558027.html (I think this one may have some fun argument...ahem...discussion points)

What do you think about taking an individual position and having a group discussion? For instance, using a Google Site for each of us to state a specific position on a topic, where we have differing perspectives, and then having a recorded conversation to resolve them.

Thoughts?

No, we are not too late. I am scrambling a bit to keep up. But I think we should go ahead and work together on this too.

I like getting it done.

I can't follow the Las Cruces link, but the HuffPost link reads very similar to Barry Trout. Let me spend a little time this evening thinking about this stuff.

I like Heather's idea of choosing a position and having a group discussion on Google Sites. However, I'm not sure I'll be able to do the recorded discussion between now and the end of the weekend. Think we can still do it effectively without that piece?

It is extra credit. I think we just need to be there. Chris is swamped so likely to be generous.

I think the site is a fine compromise.

Here's my updated (and time conscientious) proposal. We do a two part post to a controversial or debatable sentence. The first post is wholly ours and should include our experience/perspective, outside sources, etc. This will be in Google Sites by Saturday night. Sunday, we read all three initial posts and write a wholly reflective post about how interacting with all three changed our perspective, solidified our initial stance, etc. (I am leaving town Sunday around noon, so I will have to do my secondary post Sunday morning).

Thoughts?

I would suggest any of the following statements:

1. All works resulting from publicly funded research must live in the Public Domain.
2. Intellectual Property should no longer be granted legal recognition and no one should be able to sue for copyright or patent infringement.
3. Copyright should be abolished.
4. Copyright and intellectual property laws in the United States are outdated.
5. Copyright protection should be limited to the creator and bound by a length restriction.

I'm also open to any of yours.

Should we all take the same statement so it's perspectives on the same? I do like 5, I'm also partial to 1 and I also like 4.

If we follow this model, do you think we could count it for both our Wing It (evaluating each others work and reframing our reflection) and Work Together (creating the site and then commenting on each others) assignments? ;)

I played around in the Google Site to set it up and make it a bit more visitor friendly (so they would know what we are doing and also since you two did all the work on the last one!). It's pretty much ready to go for us to add content. The only thing I can't figure out is how to get the navigation menu reversed so that it reads The Statement, Take a Stand, and Reflect and Respond in order. From Sites Help it appears that the page must be set to automatically alphabetize, but I can't find that check box to turn it off. Any ideas?

Also, if you hate what I did, feel free to change it back.

Thanks for doing that Heather. Just so you know, this site is the old Google Sites. Google recently switched to a new site, which I think is more user-friendly. <https://sites.google.com/new> It doesn't matter to me whether we use the new or old site. Just wanted to make that known. But if you did want to switch, it wouldn't take much to plug in the information.

Sounds like we are good with number 4 then?

Just as an FYI, I'll have mine posted sometime tonight. I have friends coming in at midnight, so I'm working on school now. If it's not done before they get here, I'll finish it before I go to bed and I'll reflect in the morning before I leave for Denali (around 12-2?).

It makes my competitive side want to do 8 in one, but then I remember that I'm tired. ;) I think three-in-one will be fine. We worked together on the whole thing (and to build the website). The reflection piece clearly asks us to complete the weave it assignment and we set it up in such a way that it can be replicated (Wing It). Given the amount of double- and triple-dipping I've been seeing (and the length of some of those posts), I'd say we're fine.

I'm a bit confused by the part in the underlined part of this sentence: Now, take a stand and craft an argument supported by the literature and your personal experience.

Is there a specific type of literature we should be reading for this? Or should we take out the?
